- Q.4 Being a manager, Mr. Sharma, is in the process of deciding which of two persons he will appoint as a task force leader. The task is to develop a new approach for marketing an already established product. He has observed Akhil, who is quiet and reserved and interacts relatively little with his work peers. He is very bright, a hard worker, and very reliable in doing detailed, structured work. He has never been observed expressing either positive or negative emotions. The other candidate is Urmi, who is talkative and outgoing. She interacts easily with others and has a warm, outgoing style. She is sometimes careless with details and gets easily bored with repetitive, routine work. However, she enjoys solving new problems and makes good decisions in ambiguous situations. Her peer can tell what Urmi is feeling because she is quiet expressive. She has never let her emotions get out of control at work when under stress. The more difficult the problem, the more she enjoys it. 10

If you were in position of Mr. Sharma, whom would you select as a task force leader? Why?

Q.5	Elaborate in detail, the Tuckman's Five-Stage Theory of Group Development. What are the individual and group issues involved in the same?	10
Q.6	Case # 1 The real example of how conflict/s between the various stakeholders of the organization can affect the performance and image of the company are the crises observed at Hero Honda plant in Gurgaon. This happened before the Joint Venture between Hero (an Indian Organization) and Honda (a Japanese organization) came to an end, causing a huge damage to both the parties. This was a shocking event in the history of automobile industry in India. The conflict between workers and management at the Hero Honda plant in Gurgaon in 2005 and the subsequent police involvement caused stir in India. The conflict began in December 2004 after a manger allegedly slapped a worker who was said to be engaged in organizing a union within the plant. Tensions simmering between the management and workers erupted into a long-drawn out strike after four workers who expressed unity with their colleagues were dismissed and 15 others were temporarily suspended on charges of disobedience. The official explanation for the dismissal was “undisciplined beahviour in the factory.” Nearly all the workers responded to the dismissals by going on strike in June 2005, which affected the production drastically. By the end of June, the management had sacked 1000 workers and locked out the strikers. On 26 July 2005, without provocation, police allegedly attacked 2000-3000 workers protesting outside the Honda plant and 300-800 workers were said to be injured. Footage of cops going berserk after a brutal assault on their superiors led to turmoil in Parliament and angry protests from the left. These videos of unconscious workers being attacked by the police lead to a national uproar. The losses to Honda on account of the strike were reported to be to the tune of approximately Rs. 1.2 billion. According to media reports, all dismissed workers were rehired under the condition that they sign a declaration that they would withdraw from further strikes and demands. The massive strike/s not only affected the company's image but also caused damage to the reputation of the company. The Honda strike created diplomatic tension between India and Japan as well as raised concerns in the automobile sector about consequences on further foreign investment. Source: “Workers’ strike hits Hero Honda plant”, 12 April 2006, The Times of India. Available at https://timesofindia.indiatimes.com/business/india-business/Workers-strike-hits-Hero-Honda-plant/articleshow/1486584.cms a) What are the different types of conflict/s observed at Hero Honda during 2004-05? [05] b) What should have been done to resolve that conflict/s at Hero Honda? [05] c) Comment on the relationship between Conflict and Performance. How can conflicts damage the existence of an organization? Use appropriate diagram wherever necessary. [05]	15
