The Coca-Cola Company is the world’s largest multinational beverage company at the same time the world’s number one producers and marketers of soft beverages drinks and the company with the most valuable and recognized brand globally. This success of the company rotates around five key factors, which includes recognized brand, quality, marketing, availability and innovation. The company is structured on a global level with flexible adjustment features so as to comply with its regional markets sensitivity. The structure is not only based on its internal factors but it also includes external factors that include their bottling subordinates. The company produces syrups and concentrates which are being sold to the authorized bottling companies that have the mandate to produce, market and distribute products to the final consumers, this process is known and Coca-Cola System. The external relationship with its bottling subordinates is one of the company’s key strength, the Coca-Cola company work hand in hand with the bottling companies to ensure compliance with product requirements, quality and services.

Organizations may be structured on its function, product or process. The function reflect on its distinct specialism be it in production, marketing, finance or distribution while the product reflect directly on its product and the process could be in its manufacturing, packing, storing or delivering. However, organizational structure is usually design in order to meets its aims. In this regards a structure should be design to accommodate different ideas sharing within the organization and flexible decision-making and a proper management control. A multinational global organization like the Coca-Cola Company has a flexible structure that not only focused on product, marketing, distribution of finance but also profoundly encourages team work in each of their innovations. In every product development example Coca-Cola Zero, the company assemble an employee team of different specialties to analyze all the possibilities. In such teams, marketing specialists is expected to shed light on the result of his/her market research in regards to the new product, food technologies to clarify the changes and how feasible the new product is while the financial expert is to give report on the financial implications as regards to the new product.

Aside from structure, an organization is expected to have culture. An organizational culture describes the norms and values of the organization in its dealings with both internal and external subordinates. The Coca-Cola Company also based its culture on enhancing and empowering its employee, this is so because the company consider employee as its most valuable asset. Motivated employee are often the engine drive in moving an organization forward, the Coca-Cola Company often organize its employee into teams in carrying out there operations. This makes the employee feel valuable within the team by contributing different ideas on proposed operations at the same time by being innovative. The company by this strategy create a friendly and innovative culture, which made it possible for the company to depend on its workforce in maintaining its brand reputation globally. Furthermore, trust is being established as part of its culture. This is very important in every relationship, as regards to the Coca-Cola Company. Customers put their trust on the company to provide good quality product and high level of attention to customer’s needs, bottling subordinates trust the company to operate in the best interests of Coca-Cola System and so also the employee’ trust their voice will be heard and their various contributions are being valued

An open free communications is belief to be a means to sustain culture, based on that the Coca-Cola Company provide a good number of communication channels thus; monthly leadership team meetings and workers team brief sessions, departmental team meetings holding on weekly basis, each region have a consultative group with one European council representative and lastly, frequent surveys are being sent out to monitor employee's complains or suggestions.
