| Q.6 | Case Study / Case-let:

Anirban Das Blah, managing director at Kwan Entertainment and Marketing Solutions, is happy to talk about his company's tryst with influencer marketing. In April 2017, the celebrity management firm launched a small division—more like an experiment—dealing in influencer marketing and branded content. Today, the division handles business worth Rs35 crore, Blah says with pride. Influencer marketing, which essentially means offering brands demographic dividend and affinity, could entail just a tweet by a digital influencer/celebrity, a video blog or a piece of original content where the brand is integrated. Currently, Kwan has 14 people as its digital brand ambassadors, including musicians, chefs and lifestyle experts. It now plans to scale up. "We will have 60 people soon," says Blah. | 15 |

Darshana Bhalla, chief executive of Mates, the entertainment vertical of advertising agency Madison, says that currently 8-10% of its business comes from digital influencers, “but it is bound to grow.” Little surprise, then, that a recent survey by influencer marketing platform Zefmo, titled India Influence Report 2018, says that this year nearly 92% marketers will turn to influencer marketing campaigns. “The popularity of influencer marketing to drive brand awareness and reputation can be gauged by the insight that 89% of marketers have found the medium to be effective and 62% are planning to increase their budgetary allocation towards engaging social influencers,” the survey says. According to the survey findings, top marketers are of the opinion that consumers are more likely to make a purchase decision based on influencers because of authenticity and affinity. They also feel that increasingly consumers are influenced by their peers when it comes to making a purchase decision.
