Beef Ban

Beef has been at the heart of a heated controversy in India for many decades now. Recently, the country is embroiled in a controversy regarding a ban on slaughter of cows and the sale and consumption of beef. The reason is apparently simple. Hindus, who form the majority of the populace, consider the cow sacred. The cow, according to Hindu religious scriptures, is the embodiment of the Feminine Divine and motherhood. Slaughter of cows brings the greatest misfortune, Hindu religious leaders claim. Since India gained independence from the British, there has been a demand for banning cow slaughter in the country and on consumption of beef. An average Hindu, though far from being vegetarian, will abstain from consumption of beef. On the other hand, the population from several other religions in India consumes beef extensively. In India, a number of states have legislation in place to ban the slaughter of cows. Regularly, there have been scattered cases of attacks in some states for alleged consumption of beef. The state governments are in dilemma regarding beef ban considering sentiments of Hindu majority population and food habits of people of other religions in India.

Do you support the idea of beef ban? State your opinion on this issue. Present arguments and examples to support your opinion.
